Subject: Perspective on mouse project on KQED this morning
Date: 05/20/2011 07:04 AM

Heard a perspective about the Farallon project on KQED this morning by "naturalist" Michael Ellis, who I've never heard of. Was in favor of the project and made a good argument but still with misinformation; i.e., mouse predation on eggs and chicks and a claim that burrowing owls are now breeding on the island. Does anybody know him? You can get it from the link but will also air again at 7:35AM. They're also doing a poll but couldn't find that immediately on the web site.
